CONVERSATION - IT'S KEY TO NEW PEACE PROJECT

A major cross-community project to help people discuss the legacy of the conflict in and about Northern Ireland was launched by Healing through Remembering (HTR) in Dundalk today.

The outreach programme, called 'Whatever you say, say something', will offer individuals and groups the chance over the next two years to begin difficult conversations with the help of a trained facilitator who will aid the dialogue. The aim is that individuals and groups will find it easier to engage on issues relating to the conflict.

Speaking about the new initiative, Kate Turner, director of Healing Through Remembering, said: "This project offers a new opportunity for individuals and groups to meet and discuss the difficult issues around how we deal with the past. Most importantly, it offers this opportunity in a safe environment, where people can ask questions and debate the issues that matter to them.

Healing Through Remembering's Conversation Guide on Dealing with the Past, will be available to interested groups as a resource.

Ms Turner said: "The dialogue that takes place within the local communities, as part of this project, is important, not just for those participating, but also for all of society. How we deal with the past shapes the future, not only of this generation but also of those to come.

A project supported by the PEACE III Programme managed for the Special EU Programmes Body by the Community Relations Council/Pobal Consortium.

“This is why we’re encouraging people to take this opportunity to be part of facilitated discussions that meet their own local needs related to dealing with the past and remembering.”

Trained facilitators include: Will Glendinning, who has been involved in community relations and reconciliation work since the 1970s; Martin Snoddon, who has worked in a number of conflict zones throughout the world including the Balkans, Central America, Middle East and South Africa; and Joe Blake, who has worked in the voluntary and community sector for over 20 years.

Mr Glendinning said: “These conversations will allow the difficulties of living through conflict to be acknowledged and for experiences to be shared. Some people have blocked out experiences, even everyday ones and have difficulty in discussing them, despite a desire to do so.

“Many feel that others are not interested in what happened to them. Dealing with the past allows their experiences to be shared with and acknowledged by others.”

The discussion groups and workshops will offer a platform for any groups and/or organisations - to feed their views into existing HTR projects as the organisation considers how society can build a more peaceful future.

Speaking about the existing projects and how this new initiative will help to shape the future, HTR board member Dawn Purvis (leader of the Progressive Unionist Party): “Healing Through Remembering has always said that there is no single treatment for the healing process in Northern Ireland, but we see this Peace III-funded project as forming an integral part of the process of remembering, reflecting, informing and educating.

“We are also meeting with political leaders, and key institutions and organisations including victims’ groups, NGOs, political parties, religious organisations, statutory bodies, ex-combatants, security forces, artists and performers.

“Links will also be developed with international organisations. This is a new opportunity for every voice to be heard and we are delighted to be launching the project today.”

1. Dawn Purvis is leader of the Progressive Unionist Party and Assembly Member for East Belfast.
2. Will Glendinning is a former chief executive of the Community Relations Council, now working as a consultant on cultural diversity, community relations and transition from conflict. Will was also an Alliance Party councillor for a West Belfast ward in the Belfast City Council, 1977 to 1987 and from 1982 to 1986, he was an elected member of the Northern Ireland Assembly. In the early 1970s he served in the UDR in Co. Armagh.
3. Larry Moley - lives close to the border in South Armagh. He works for Communities Connect based in the Dundalk Institute of Technology. His job involves developing and facilitating cross-border cross-community youth programmes. He also chairs a men's group called Menaware, which operates in South Armagh and the border area. He also sits on the management committee of PIPS Newry and Mourne.
4. Martin Snoddon is director of Northern Spring. He is a trainer and consultant who specialises in training on conflict resolution and dealing with the past by addressing the legacy of violent conflict through process facilitation on conflict related issues. Martin works within all sections of society and has extended his experience through work in numerous international conflict settings.
5. Joe Blake is an independent consultant who has been working in the statutory, voluntary and community sector for the last 20 years. He has a particular interest in working with local community groups in the field of good relations. He is currently a councilmember of the Northern Ireland Social Care Council and represents Comic Relief in Northern Ireland.
6. Kate Turner is Director of Healing Through Remembering and has been involved with Healing Through Remembering since its inception. Kate manages all aspects of the organisation's development in conjunction with the Board of Directors.

7. There are currently five HTR sub-groups who explore and debate potential suggestions, including a Living Memorial Museum, a Day of Reflection, Truth Recovery, Commemoration, Acknowledgement and Storytelling. We hope that these wider discussions will question, inform and further shape these debates.
8. Healing Through Remembering (HTR) is a cross-community organisation that considers how to deal with the past relating to the conflict. Its membership includes people from diverse backgrounds including loyalist, republican, army, and police backgrounds as well as from different faith backgrounds, victims and community groups and academic institutions.
9. HTR has received funding from the European Union's European Regional Development Fund through the PEACE III programme managed for the Special EU Programmes Body by the Community Relations Council / Border Action Consortium.
10. HTR has undertaken a range of consultations, commissioned research, held conferences, led seminars and workshops to both gather public opinion on how to deal with the past as well as inform those not engaged in the debate. Reports of the above activities include:
